5. (New) A method of teaching writing, comprising the steps of providing a teaching aid which acts as a metaphoric model for works of writing, such works of writing having content and structure, the teaching aid comprising an assembly of three-dimensional representations of components of a multi-component article familiar to students being taught, assigning a particular aspect of content and/or structure of works of writing to the components of the article, attempting to assemble the article using the three-dimensional representations of the components that correspond to the content and/or structure used in a work of writing, and recalling, interpreting, applying, analyzing, synthesizing, and/or judging the content or structure of the work of writing by viewing what was assembled with the three-dimensional representations.
6. (New) The method of claim 5, further including the step of using the three-dimensional representations as a checklist to determine what should be in the work of writing.

7. (New) The method of claim 5,
the components being parts of a hamburger.
8. (New) The method of claim 5, the three-dimensional representations being constructed from colored craft foam.
9. (New) The method of claim 5, the three-dimensional representations being pillows.
10. (New) A method of writing using a writing aid which acts as a metaphoric model for works of writing, such works of writing having content and structure, the writing aid comprising an assembly of three-dimensional representations of components of a multi-component article, the components having defined particular aspects of content and/or structure of works of writing, comprising the steps of writing a work of writing, attempting to assemble the article using the three-dimensional representations of the components that correspond to the content and/or structure used in the work of writing, and recalling, interpreting, applying, analyzing, synthesizing, and/or judging the content or structure of the work of writing by viewing what was assembled with the three-dimensional representations.
11. (New) The method of claim 10, further including the step of editing the work of writing as desired to add, change, and/or rearrange content or structure.
